Transitioning My Life with Life Group

Entering Primary Year 4, I was transferred from a Chinese school to a Christian school and became a Christian at age of 13. I have to admit that I feel privileged because, throughout my teenage life, the Gospel and the Christian environment are being spoon-fed to me at school. I never really needed to seek a Christian place (i.e. church/life group) to dwell in. I have never ever felt lonely nor distant from God or God's people.

However, things took a turn after I graduated from high school. I lost my Christian place, my comfort zone. Throughout my college and uni life, I zone in/out of Christian fellowship

One thing that touches me is that although I have been an inactive member of the LifeGroup for 5 years, they do not make me feel foreign or alienate me. They still welcome me warmly and it makes me feel as though I have been with them the whole time despite being inactive. My LifeGroup has made it easy for me to come back to the Christian living and on the journey of searching for God.

groups in uni and seldom/never attend church. Until one day, randomly, my best friend invited me to FBC. The moment I listened to the sermon given by FBC, I kinda found the "safe Christian environment" that I once felt and am longing for. Since then, I have been an FBC church-goer, for 5 years now. In saying that, I never really participate in church activities nor involve myself in a LifeGroup (although I am in a LifeGroup). The reason/excuse is that I am very busy with work, as an auditor.

Until last year after I resigned, I made it a point for myself that I need to get a job that allows me time to be more active in church/life group. So then, I started to involve myself more in LifeGroup, joining the Saturday bible study classes, and some of the LifeGroup activities that the members arrange. One thing that touches me is that although I have been an inactive member of the LifeGroup for 5 years, they do not make me feel foreign or alienate me. They still welcome me warmly and it makes me feel as though I have been with them the whole time despite being inactive. My LifeGroup has made it easy for me to come back to the Christian living and on the journey of searching for God.

LifeGroup has made me different today because it taught me that persistent effort can touch people's hearts. I gotta confess that sometimes, a lot of time I think that my LifeGroup is very quiet and occasionally have a lot of awkward silence during the discussion, but the down-to-earth/quiet style suited me, an introvert person.

LifeGroup has made me different today because it taught me that persistent effort can touch people's hearts. I gotta confess that sometimes, a lot of time I think that my LifeGroup is very quiet and occasionally have a lot of awkward silence during the discussion, but the down-to-earth/quiet style suited me, an introvert person. Sometimes, we would also have board games sessions and birthday celebrations where we get to mingle around physically with the members, it was fun and it makes me feel more alive and connected.

Besides that, LifeGroup members have supported me despite my being inactive for 5 years. There are a couple of times when I have queries and needed some advice (bring friends to Alpha, marriage courses queries, funeral queries), I would always look for big brother Desmond. He would always reply and get me to where I needed. They are also very supportive because whenever I needed prayer, I would not hesitate to highlight it to the group so that my request can be made to God together as a LifeGroup.

In saying all these, I am not saying that I am already fully committed to LifeGroup yet but the progress is there and I am confident that my LifeGroup members will be there for me. And I pray that one day, I would be seen as a part of the LifeGroup active members making the inactive/new members feel at home and do Life together to glorify God.
